Accrington and Rossendale College are one of the premier facilities in the North of England for the teaching of Construction skills.

The scheme comprised the construction of a new construction and technology building for a leading construction skill centre in the North West of England. The building was completed in September 2001 after a 36-week build period. Rider Levett Bucknall was appointed as Project Manager through the OJEU route.

We undertook some design management on the scheme, tendered the project and advised the client on the contractor to use. We then took the scheme through the build period liaison closely with both the client and the Contractor to achieve a successful conclusion.

Successfully completed on schedule and within budget between September 2000 and September 2001.
